Don Quixote asked Sancho to see those thirty huge giants towering over the plain. He commented that he would do the world a great service if he rid it of such cruel and greedy monsters as those giants always were. Wondering, Sancho asked what giants he (Don Quixote) was talking about. Don, his master, replied that those were straight ahead of him with long outstretched arms. With great respect, Sancho replied that the standing elements ahead were not giants; those were windmills. And the arms were nothing but the sails, which could turn when the windmills blew to make the mills go.
